"The Art of Racing in the Rain has everything: love, tragedy, redemption, danger, and—most especially—the canine narrator Enzo. This old soul of a dog has much to teach us about being human."
—Sara Gruen, author of Water for Elephants

A Note to Educators

As a community college adjunct professor, I chose The Art of Racing in the Rain as my supplemental novel for a couple of basic reading classes. I'd read the novel a year earlier and felt every student could relate to the novel on many levels.

In the beginning, some students were dubious about reading a novel narrated by a dog—but almost immediately the class became emotionally connected with the novel. In my many years of teaching, I'd never had class embrace a novel like they did The Art of Racing in the Rain.

When I created this curriculum, it was for my classes only—but after such a positive response from students—I wanted to make it available to other instructors. Of course, it's just a starting point—and you'll take from it what works for you and your students.

Here's to experiencing the magic of having your students truly engage with a novel!

Assignment 1: Characters

To complete this writing assignment, make sure you have carefully read the first seven chapters of The Art of Racing in the Rain, as assigned on your reading schedule before you begin this assignment.

You can refer to your novel to complete this assignment's three parts. Part A: Describe each of the characters listed below with at least three important details about each.
Denny:
Zoë:
Eve:

Assignment 1: Characters

Part B: Complete the character chart below. Choose one character and concentrate on the details about that character that helped you understand him or her. Use this chart to record the details about the main character that made an impression on you.

Character Name:

What character says and does:	What other characters think about this character:
How this character looks and feels:	How I feel about this character:

Assignment 1: Characters

Part C: Select a moment or incident in the novel so far where you strongly agreed or disagreed with the way your chosen character reacted or handled the situation.

Choose at least one quotation from the book to support your answer. Your response should be at least 100 words. If you have more to say, you may write more, but less than the 100 words will affect your score.

Assignment 2: Plot

To complete this writing assignment, make sure you have carefully read to page 97 of The Art of Racing in the Rain, as assigned on your reading schedule.

This assignment has two parts. Be sure to discuss what your thoughts and ideas are in some detail. Remember to use at least one direct quote from the novel to support your answer.

You may refer to your novel and lecture notes to complete this assignment.

Part A: Complete the story string on the opposite side of this page. Concentrate on plot details that were pivotal, the ones that seemed to change the directions of the events of the story. Use this tool to record the important details about the progress of events so far.

Part B: Select one event you recorded on your story string. Write a short essay that answers the following:

- How did the character's choices at that moment influence what came after it?
- What would have happened if the character had made a different choice?
- If you could give your main character advice about what to do next at that point, what would it b?
- Why would you give your character that advice?

Choose at least one quotation from the book to support your answer. Your response should be approximately 100 words. If you find you have more to say, you may write more, but less that 100 words will affect your score.

Assignment 2: Plot

Part A: Create a story string. Record the major elements of the plot as they have unfolded so far. Remember, you will need page references.

3	4
5	6
7	8

Assignment 3: Setting

Setting consists of many things, including the place and time of the story, sights, sounds, smells, tastes, objects, and weather. Even minor characters, when they are just hovering in the background, can be thought about as part of the setting.

Setting works hand in hand with the other elements of a story. Characters are shaped by their surroundings. Plots spring naturally out of a certain setting and move forward as scenes change. Important ideas are reinforced by the settings. And last but not least, feelings-yours and the characters' are influenced by the many details of an author's carefully prepared setting.

Make a list of the details that show the setting The Art of Racing in the Rain. Include the following:

Time: What's the time of the day or year, past or present?

Place: Where does the story take place? Is there more than one place?

Sight, Sounds, Smells: What is the scene surrounding the houses or dwellings?

Use the details you've listed to help you answer the following questions.

How does the setting shape the characters in the book?

How does the setting influence the way the characters feel in the book?

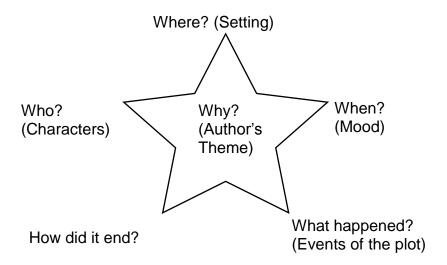

Add anything extra that deals with the setting.

Assignment 4: Story Mapping

Stories are a timeless method of sharing ideas and insights. A well-told story can illustrate a truth, prompt reflection and introspection, challenge our preconceptions, stimulate discussion, inspire us to action, or change the way we understand ourselves and our world. Since stories are also predominately an indirect method of delivering messages as readers, it is often up to readers to figure out just what a story is saying.

Story Maps feature graphic representations of key story elements to build a framework for understanding and remembering a story.

Common elements of narrative structure are in this Story Star.

A story features some sort of conflict and how that conflict gets resolved is what makes a story interesting. The basic kinds of conflict inherent in fictional literature are:

- Within a person
- Between people
- Between people and nature.

Significant questions should relate to the setting, character development, events of the plot, the conflict and its resolution and the author's possible themes.

Using the outline on the next page as your framework, create a story map for The Art of Racing in the Rain.
